What's New In BugShot?

BugShot provides a user-friendly interface that doesn't require a developer's training to use. The screenshots are saved in a folder, and can be recovered and viewed later. BugShot allows the user to find and replace values such as dropdown box values and edit existing images to add comments to them. The number of immigrants who have entered the U.S. illegally and remain in the country was cut in half in the first three months of fiscal 2018 compared to the last three months of fiscal 2017, according to data released by the U.S. Department of Homeland Security and provided exclusively to Breitbart News by DHS officials. The official number of aliens who remained in the U.S. illegally came down from 39,132 in October 2017, to 17,269 in February 2018, officials told Breitbart News. The drop was largely due to the border crisis that started in May 2017 with the border explosion of illegal aliens who broke into the U.S. and presented themselves at the southern border. The number of border crossers dropped from a high of nearly 100,000 in May to under 14,000 in January 2018. But there were still some months in the third quarter of fiscal 2018 when the number of illegal aliens remained high. In July and August, they jumped to 18,644 from 11,225 the previous quarter. DHS officials told Breitbart News that border agents in the past few months have been credited with detaining a total of 1,773 single adults apprehended who had children with them. The same officials told Breitbart News that the data was a reflection of immigration laws and border enforcement policy in place at the time of the apprehension. "A lot of the [immigrants] that are coming across the border illegally have a lot of the relatives here, so they are trying to get them out here. Also, [American officials] are not releasing them," a DHS official said. The number of illegals who are family units is a way to distinguish the border surge in migrants that has occurred since last summer. The number of family units declined in the first three months of fiscal 2018 compared to the previous quarter. The number of family units declined to 9,840 from 12,670 in the previous quarter.
