To illustrate the differences between a real photo and a manipulated or "shopped" version, here is the same photo. And here is the result of the same photo being manipulated (or "shopped") with Photoshop. When working with PSD files, you can view and edit multiple layers at once with multiple tools, making the project much easier to handle. If you see a specific effect you want to apply to a certain area in your image, you can manipulate the image for the entire layer at once, as opposed to manipulating the whole

image each time. In this tutorial, we will go through the basic steps of using Photoshop and how to manipulate photos. Once we are familiar with the basics of Photoshop, we will use some more complex techniques to manipulate photos into 3D illusions. Whether you are a beginner, intermediate, or expert, this tutorial will teach you how to use Photoshop effectively and if you have the skills already, then you will see how you can use Photoshop for your next design. The Steps To Edit Images To edit images, you will need a suitable photo editing program, such as Adobe Photoshop. Adobe Photoshop has been around since 1993, making it a tried and tested image editor. Photoshop's main section is divided into a large workspace where the image is resized and placed, and then a menu bar that is used to manipulate that image. These photos are an example of what the workspace and menu bar looks like. This menu bar has been placed at the top of the image window to allow easy access to most functions. The tools in the menu bar can be found at the bottom left in a thin toolbar. For this tutorial, we are going to edit an image of the monitor wall, as the monitor is wider than the photo. Because the monitor is the same size as the original photo, editing it is only one step. The following steps show how to add shadows and level the image. Step 1: Adding a layer To add an image layer into Photoshop, you must first create a new layer on a new Photoshop document. Photoshop has a very easy and friendly user interface where you simply double-click on an empty area of the workspace in which to create a new image layer. This is the recommended way to add layers to an image. Select the New Layer icon (located at the bottom left in the toolbar) or press the CTRL + SHIFT + N keys on your keyboard.

SMART Sustainability has developed a thriving business providing automated water-use optimisation to more than 30,000 Australian homes. Eco-Plant™ incorporates sensors, intelligent metering, and a smart-phone application to monitor and reduce water consumption by up to 30% whilst offering residents real-time pricing to save even more water. Eco-Plant™ users receive notifications via mobile phone when they run out of water, allowing them to keep themselves, and their neighbours, updated on their water usage. Eco-Plant™ also advises householders on how much water is safe for them to use at their current level of consumption. The Eco-Plant™ system is ideal for Atherton as Sydney's climate can cause water wastage at residential and commercial properties when it's not used or when it's not properly treated. Our treatment plant is approx 30 minutes drive from Atherton in one of the driest spots in Australia and our catchment serves 1,000,000 residents, an agricultural community and significant infrastructure in our commercial, industrial and residential market. Atherton Hot Water System Corporation's Commercial Manager, Chris Weller said, "Our customers value the convenience of having smart metering and the opportunity to save water both on their property and on their bill. SMART Sustainability◆"
