Song, L. C. Li, and P. J. Mucha. In the article "Quantitative analysis of bacterial biomass and cell size distribution in liquid environments," by Chen et al. [L. C. Li, C. K. Lin, S. Chen, Y. Song, and P. J. Mucha (2009) Water Resour. Res., 45, W09405-W09411], the laboratory model was used to estimate total bacterial biomass in culture medium by replacing the biomass of bacteria with known concentration of suspended particles with a correction coefficient of 1.10. The manuscript was correctly pointed out the method has inherent error, but the experiment has three problems. (1) The rate of biomass concentration factor was adopted as an average of the kinetics of exponential, stationary, and death phases. A constant addition rate of 10(5) colony forming units (CFU)/mL in liquid model culture medium is not a good model to reflect the kinetics of bacterial concentration. (2) Only young cells were counted in liquid model culture medium. (3) The real biomass of bacteria was not substituted in the liquid model culture medium when the biomass is used as a correction factor.The last few weeks have been marked with uncertainty for Russia's economy. Some analysts are confident that Russia is set to enter a recession, while others see no signs of a crisis, and believe the ruble will eventually rebound. However, two very different big stories over the last few weeks, certainly did not help the situation: - The "mystery" banking crisis - The "mystery" oil price fall The banking crisis was relatively easy to explain: Russia's three biggest banks are loaded with dodgy sub-prime loans, as a result of which they have been forced to go to the central bank in order to restructure their debt. The three banks together hold nearly $200 billion of such loans. As a result of the restructuring deal, which involves the banks being placed under the central bank's management, the shares of the three banks' stock tumbled - which forced their chairmen and other top bosses to resign. However, while the financial markets have been quick to analyse how the deal can be

A neuroimaging study of the neural circuitry implicated in reward processing in early psychostimulant use: Altered striatal activation in response to rewarding stimuli in methamphetamine dependent subjects. The dopamine system in the striatum has been well characterized as a major structure implicated in reward processing, however, their role in responding to the rewarding effects of methamphetamine (METH) use has not been clearly identified. In this study, functional magnetic resonance imaging (fMRI) was used to examine the neuroanatomical basis of reward processing. Using blood oxygen level-dependent (BOLD) fMRI, 32 adult methamphetamine abusers (MA) and 32 non-drug-using healthy controls (HC) were scanned after self-administration of METH or placebo. The BOLD response to pictures of one's own-name was analyzed. Reward was defined as the contrast of own name versus fixation. We found MA to have lower ventral striatal activation in the left nucleus accumbens and posterior putamen than HC in response to the rewarding effects of METH. The findings suggest that in MA the reward function is reduced in ventral striatal structures. It is our hope that further investigation of this reward deficit may shed light on the etiology of addiction and relapse.Parc Branchline The Parc Branchline was a passenger railway line in Blaenau Gwent from Brynmawr to Parc. History Opening The branchline opened in 1912, and the section from Llanharry to Brynmawr became a through station. The section to Parc had opened on 3 January 1901. Traffic The railway was mainly used by the hosiery company: Harland and Wolff which had a large factory at Parc, and hosiery factories at Brynmawr, Llanharry and Blaenau Ffestiniog. Closure The line closed for good on 9 December 1964, although the section to Blaenau Ffestiniog remained open until 1972. Present day The track remains intact for about half a mile from Brynmawr to Llanharry where it is used by narrow-gauge railways to haul clay from the quarry at Glyn Padarn to the Brynmawr Marshalling Yard. The South is the only division that has a team ranked in the top 5 in every poll. Additionally, four of the last six South division champions have won the conference championship. In other words, the South has been the thorn in the side of the rest of the conference for a while now. However
