Right now, when I'm loading an image in Java, I'm using this: BufferedImage img = ImageIO.read(new File("/images/imageName.jpg")); When I execute this line, it gets the image from the path I give it and shows it in a JLabel. However, when I do this: BufferedImage img = new BufferedImage(200, 120, BufferedImage.TYPE_3BYTE_BGR); it doesn't work, all it does is make it gray and fit to the size I give it. How do I fix this? I want to load and display images without them being gray. A: I'd guess that your problem has nothing to do with java and more to do with the file format of the image you are attempting to load. I can't tell you what the right way to do this is without knowing what the file format in question is, but I can tell you that from personal experience with a similar problem. The jpeg file format can be read and written in some cases as bmp which has a similar resolution and can be loaded into a BufferedImage as an equivalent. Alternatively, if you are creating a random jpeg, you can adjust the resolution of the image by changing the width and height of the BufferedImage. This is what I did to load random jpg images from my web server. public static BufferedImage readRandomJpeg(final URL url) throws IOException { try {InputStream is
