Q: How to run multiple java classes on one core in Java? I have a very large project (3 years, 1400 employees) of about 15,000 java classes that runs on 1 machine. I want to be able to parallel run these classes on different machines to increase speed (the project is currently running in serial). This seems pretty simple to do using multithreaded programming, but I've never done any of this before. I'm aware that fork()/exec() is not supported in java. What is the best approach for this? My gut tells me to start with a basic threading program to see where I'm up to before I try to parallelize? A: Parallelized program implies that you're using threads which share some data or resources. You can look at java.util.concurrent.Executors: public ExecutorService createService() { return new ThreadPoolExecutor(5, Integer.MAX_VALUE, 60L, TimeUnit.SECONDS, new LinkedBlockingQueue()); } This means, ExecutorService will run tasks in 5 threads (5 corresponds to 5 cores) for 60 seconds (that's the TimeUnit.SECONDS). You can change this for your specific requirements. You can use ExecutorService instead of your own threadpool by sending your own thread pool to ExecutorService before calling createService. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method and apparatus for manufacturing a microcircuit device having a structure of over-etching a sacrificial layer formed on the front side of a semiconductor substrate. 2. Description of the Related Art In a process of manufacturing a semiconductor device such as an integrated circuit and an active device, various microfabrication technologies have been developed to improve the device performance and the integration. Recently, in addition to the reduction of the total of the device size, the need for increasing the reduction in the device area has been also increasingly required for the application of MEMS (Micro Electro Mechanical Systems). As a result of such a trend, a method for processing a silicon wafer substrate to be used for manufacturing a semiconductor device or an active device becomes to be important. In a manufacturing process of
