Reply to DerzenHigh Hi Derzenhigh, thank you for your answer. By using this software, you agree to the terms of use and privacy. I agree with you but I want the possibility to decide for myself. When there is an update I would have to do an update manually because the software cannot be set to check for updates automatically. I am using the Geforce gtx 560 and it has a game patch (the game cracked). By updating manually it would be a process similar to what I did when installing the game (I already did this several times). I do not want to update every update. If the game is cracked, it is the owner that must do a manually update when he wants to update. Of course, he would have to know the game crack and how to update manually. Also, there should be some automatic updater the game does not work. If there is not an automatic updater (or not available) I would not be able to update manually. My home computer would need a process similar to the one I use for installing the game (same process): install the game, check if there is any update, do a manual update when there is and then another one when there is another update. If there was a process similar to this then the possibility of doing a manual update would be easier. But I can not upgrade manually if the game is cracked if there is no automatic updater or at least a way to know when there is an update. Thanks again. I have a question. I purchased the game when it was new and was cracked. I played it for a few days and decided I could not be spending a third of my life. I will not be getting the upcoming. I really like the assassins creed series but I can not spend 3 hours a day playing video games
