Photoshop Elements lets you edit images with tools that are similar to those in Photoshop, including the ability to cut, paste, flatten, restore, and more. Yet it doesn't support all the advanced tools you'll find in Photoshop. You'll have to find your own tools for editing your photos — and you'll have to spend a bit of time learning them. There's plenty to see in the Elements user interface. Just like in other areas of your computer, there are panels along the top with tools that you can click on to perform tasks. Photoshop Elements also includes an attractive calendar panel that can be used to view images by month. Edit, View, and Create When you first open Photoshop Elements, you see the Choose File dialog, which lets you navigate to and open any file in the computer. When you open a file, Elements displays the actual content of the file in the Content pane. You can view an image in the Preview display window, which is similar to the image view in other graphics editors. You can resize the preview, rotate it, magnify it or any other way you can change the size of the canvas. You can also manipulate the image using the tools that are found along the top. Note: The Preview display window is very convenient for quickly making edits. But because it's not designed for viewing large files, you may not want to use it as a replacement for the main image view. However, if you find that you need a second monitor or a bigger monitor for viewing the image, then you can display the image in the Preview display window on your second monitor or external monitor. When you're finished viewing the image, click the Done button or press Esc on the keyboard to exit from the image display and save the file. When you import an image into Elements, you'll be asked to choose from a variety of options. In the case of the JPEG format, for example, you have the option of choosing the color mode and whether to include the EXIF header. The user interface for file import allows you to choose options for file type, resolution, rotation and color mode. Although the interface is fairly similar to that of Photoshop, Elements lacks the more advanced tools found in the professional version of the program. The tools that you see are designed to get you started with a certain type of image editing and they will help you get an idea of what the professional tools can do 388ed7b0c7

Castle of Cervera The Castle of Cervera (Castillo de Cervera) is a medieval castle in the municipality of Llombai, in the comarca of Pla de Mallorca, in the Valencian Community. History It is generally believed that this structure was commissioned by a member of the Mallorquin Al-Hakamid dynasty, Lluís I d'Al-Hakam, who died in 1161. Its defensive design and unique architecture gave rise to its name, "The Castle of the Eleventh". The first fortification system was built around 1140 and it was expanded and improved in the second half of the century. The walls now reach a length of. During the late 12th century and 13th century, the structure was annexed to the medieval County of Valencia and for a time to the Kingdom of Aragon before reverting to Mallorca. The Castle of Cervera was at the origin of its defeat during the military campaign of the Valencian court during the 1348–49 War of the Gazelas against Charles II of Naples, and of the siege in 1354 of Palma de Majorca by forces of the Catalan-Aragonese Kingdom of Majorca under Oleg I and the future King Peter III. In the following centuries it was under Spanish ownership and it was notably assaulted in 1640, 1656, 1708 and 1716, being the last siege to complete a victory. For that reason, from that time on, it was considered an emblem of the power of the House of the Habsburg. Thanks to a restored system in 1992 and as a result of the rural development plan implemented by the government in 2000, the castle houses the castle museum. The walls of the castle are used for agricultural training for the local school and the Tower of the Dragon is used for training of the catalan border police. Perfection: second day Today was the biggest day of many days to come for me. It was time to paint the walls in my bedroom and also in our house. Hauspanten in Germany is a popular region where several big production companies use it as scenery for a lot of TV-series. It's even featured as a winter holiday destination for a lot of people living in Germany. The scene we are filming right now was shot at a real resort, located by the sea, with an amazing architecture… And here it's where things get a bit complex. The wall we had to paint was about 2.4m high and of course 4m long. Our white wall had a lot of cracks, so we've asked the team to change our white wall into a "warm egg-yolk" color. Everything was done by hand: the painters were using a sponge to spread the color and cover the cracks. The same sponge was also used to paint the front fence, two steps down, and a rectangle on the wall. When it was done, we posed for a photo. (The I am not a photographer Duhhh!) After that, we had lunch. We had a black pizza made of tomatoes, capers, onions, peppers, fish and mozzarella cheese. It was very good. We took a little break to do some yoga on the grass, under a big tree (behind the yellow stick). I'm taking another break to show you one of the most beautiful moments of the day. Finally, we moved in our new house: The house is so big that to understand the height, you have to imagine that both of us are standing on the ground level. As we are happy to live in a beautiful house, we decorated it with more flowers, boxes and flowers, and then I had to make a photo for my lovely mother. Our house is located in Stuttgart, Germany. We found it on a hill, at the end of a long private road. It took us 2 minutes to walk from our little apartment to the house. I'm so happy that I finally reached my dream about this big house to live alone. I'm happy for my husband who found this place on a very hot day last year… I just hope it won't be a
