They also intended to ban retail sales in the state. But it is widely expected that the proposal will face opposition both in the Legislature and in court, and the fate of the proposed changes remains unclear. San Francisco's ban on retail sales of marijuana has already drawn legal challenges, and even if the ban is upheld, the measure's opponents could argue that future officials cannot enforce it. The Legislature has tried several times over the last 30 years to legalize sales and use of marijuana. On Thursday, legislators from both parties unveiled bills as a package — the first such package to emerge from the marijuana discussions. "This effort represents the most comprehensive effort of any state to seek to regulate the cannabis industry," Gov. Jerry Brown said at a news conference with lawmakers. The Senate took the lead on Thursday, and the Assembly on Friday. The proposal would not change the way medical and recreational use of marijuana is currently regulated. It would instead raise the state's legal age for the purchase of marijuana from 19 to 21. The proposal would also change the rules of where marijuana can be used. Currently, marijuana can be used anywhere as long as the consumption does not pose a risk of physical harm to others. Under the proposed changes, marijuana could be smoked in places like private homes, public parks and public schools and libraries as long as the use is not open and lewd. Laryngeal involvement is the leading cause of life-threatening respiratory crises in patients with myasthenia gravis (MG). Between January 1998 and March 2001, 151 MG patients who had undergone thymectomy for the treatment of MG were reviewed retrospectively. A single patient developed transient respiratory disturbance following
