I made a huge decision in my life that had a lot of risk. While the end result was worth it, it didn't come without a lot of challenges. I shared a little about it over on Facebook and it got great feedback (comments, Likes, and even a few tears). I guess that's ok. It's amazing how a few words on the internet can resonate with people on a profound level. I guess it's because people empathize. I saw an article from someone who had been in a similar situation. He was raised in a very different faith tradition than I am. He shared his story and it resonated with me in a deep, emotional way. Since then, I've been thinking and praying about the situation and trying to make my own way out of it. I don't know if I'm in the place where I'm ready to fully open my

Quantification of the resistance of a human red blood cell to H<sub>2</sub>O<sub>2</sub>-induced hemolysis. The degree of resistance of red blood cells to H<sub>2</sub>O<sub>2</sub>-induced oxidative hemolysis was quantified by fluorescence quenching of the cell-bound, cationic fluorochrome, pyranine. The extent of hemolysis was determined by measurement of released hemoglobin and/or by microscopy. The concentration of H<sub>2</sub>O<sub>2</sub> was calculated from the fluorescence intensity of quenched pyranine by use of a simple self-quenching procedure. A linear correlation between released hemoglobin and the concentrations of H<sub>2</sub>O<sub>2</sub> was obtained. The yield of hemoglobin released was inversely proportional to the concentration of H<sub>2</sub>O<sub>2</sub>. The maximum rate of hemoglobin release at 1.7 mmol of H<sub>2</sub>O<sub>2</sub>/l was 29 and 17 micrograms/h per mm<sup>3</sup> of red blood cells at 37 and 20 degrees C, respectively. Extensive quenching of pyranine was observed by exposure of the red cells to lower concentrations of H<sub>2</sub>O<sub>2</sub>, the time-dependence of hemolysis, the distribution of hemoglobin released at different times during the time course of quenching, and the yield of hemolysis as determined by microscopic inspection. These results establish that pyranine fluorescence
