Known examples of the above-described light-emitting element includes a light-emitting element whose light emitting layer is made of an organic compound material (for example, see Patent Document 1 and Patent Document 2). An organic compound material is an excellent material for a light-emitting layer of a light-emitting element because the material can be deposited by a vacuum deposition method, sputtering, or the like. Further, an organic compound material has advantages including that the material is relatively cheap and provides a high degree of design freedom because materials can be selected from a wide variety of compounds. Arsenic-induced apoptosis in NCB-20 human large cell lymphoma cells is mediated by the BH3-only protein Bik and the p53 tumor suppressor. Arsenic (As) is a well-known human carcinogen and causes a high incidence of mortality and cancer in the southeast Asian population. In experimental animals, exposure to As causes lymphomas. The molecular mechanisms of As-induced lymphomas are not known. The present study describes for the first time the gene expression profile of the large cell lymphoma cell line NCB-20 in response to As exposure. In this study we explored the role of the apoptotic pathway in the response of NCB-20 cells to As. Using cDNA microarrays we examined the expression profile of apoptosis genes in NCB-20 cells treated with As. In addition to a direct role of As in the induction of apoptosis, this study demonstrated that the BH3-only protein Bik is involved in this event. Expression of the tumor suppressor protein p53 was also shown to be increased in As-treated cells. Knock-down of either Bik or p53 gene expression sensitized NCB-20 cells to As-induced apoptosis suggesting that both of these genes might be important mediators in the apoptotic response.
