its help provides additional information for each virus and its characteristic. you can generate a malware report, which shows the detection of the virus and the characteristics found in its grains. the system detects and traces all the movements of the virus, and all the characteristics of the grains found.the features of the virus distinguish it from others, including the strategy of the virus, the components of the virus and the techniques used by the virus to infect the machine (see figure). to ensure that the information displayed matches the antivirus software from the virus library, the program is updated constantly. the information on the virus is extracted from the library and is displayed after the virus name. unknown viruses: the second interface shows an example of a virus that has not yet been found. in this case the virus has been provided with a dictionary, which corresponds to every grain that could be found in the virus. the malicious code which we create in the tutorial is especially vulnerable to attack through the port 80/tcp and consequently must be downloaded to a central server on the internet to which one has to establish a connection and from which it spreads, for example, by e-mail. the maintainer of the virus is looking for feedback and ideas on what to add to the virus making software. there is currently no way to restore software from a backup. for more information check out this video: the first option is to delete all of the data on a computer, so it's an extremely risky option. the second option allows you to specify the target of the virus. so if you have two computers, you can send one of them a virus that deletes all of the data on the computer, and the other one a virus that is going to spread.
