Q: Problem with "include" in Rails I am working with Rails 3.1.0 and I am trying to develop a proof of concept for my site. I have some problems with the "include" statement. I want to use the full functionality of the "includes" method of ActiveRecord. So I created a controller action: def index User.find_by_name('admin').include(:roles) end Now, when I call that action from my browser, I get the following error: NoMethodError in UsersController#index undefined method `includes' for # This happens to all include types of method: def my_action User.find_by_name('admin').inclusions end undefined method `inclusions' for # I tried this in a custom action and the error still occurs. I'm getting really confused by this. A: The method call doesn't look right. You're trying to call User#include but I think you mean User.include: User.find_by_name('admin').include(:roles) The effect of a 1-minute arterial occlusion on the microcirculation and the appearance of venoarteriolar reflex in response to inspiratory pressure variations in the rabbit ear.
